Exploring the Anthology

Curated with impeccable taste and sensitivity, "Good Fall Stories" features a diverse collection of tales that span centuries and continents. Each story is a unique gem, showcasing the extraordinary talent of its author. From the timeless classics of American literature to the poignant insights of contemporary writers, this anthology offers a literary feast for readers of discerning tastes.

Among the many literary luminaries represented in the collection are: Nathaniel Hawthorne, Edith Wharton, Willa Cather, Ernest Hemingway, Robert Frost, and Truman Capote. Their stories explore the myriad aspects of fall, from its serene beauty to its haunting melancholy. Whether you seek a quiet escape or a profound contemplation on the passage of time, "Good Fall Stories" has something to offer every reader.

- Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Ethan Brand" delves into the dark recesses of the human soul amidst the eerie beauty of a New England autumn.
- Edith Wharton's "The Long Run" captures the poignant longing for a bygone era as the leaves fall from an aging estate.
- Willa Cather's "The Wind" paints a mesmerizing portrait of the harsh beauty of the Nebraska prairie in autumn's embrace.
- Ernest Hemingway's "Indian Camp" offers a stark and moving glimpse into the cycle of life and death in the wilderness during autumn.
- Robert Frost's "After Apple-Picking" reflects on the contentment and weariness that come with autumn's harvest.
- Truman Capote's "The Thanksgiving Visitor" explores the complex dynamics of family and memory against the backdrop of a fading autumn day.
